

Slide-o-meter Sheets 2024

This is for anyone who wants to be a bit more active on election night rather than just listening to the pundits. You can be your own expert, and track for yourself what's going on. It is resolutely low-tech, but has been proved to be quite fun and copes well when results are coming in fast.

All you need to do is:

- Print out this file (all 8 pages)
- Get some coloured highlighter pens (red, dark blue, orange, light blue, yellow and green)

As results come in, just quickly mark each seat with the colour of the winning party. You will build up a picture of whether the Conservatives or Labour are doing better or worse than expected, and what party(s) might get a majority.

The sheets also keep track of marginal seats, including some high-profile seats which might have a surprise result.

Index sheets

The first three sheets are the index sheets. These contain all 632 constituencies (excluding Northern Ireland) in alphabetical order. Next to each seat is the winning party in 2019, the predicted winning party today, and the predicted winning majority in this seat (in per cent).

For example, an interesting seat is Bedfordshire Mid in the first column of the first page

Name	2019	Pred	Maj
Bedfordshire Mid	CON	LAB	14

showing that Bedfordshire Mid is predicted to be a Labour gain with a predicted majority of around 14pc. Using the predicted winner and majority, we will index this seat as a "Lab-14" seat. That is the Labour party are predicted to win the seat with a 14pc majority.

Party sheets

The next three sheets, the party sheets, show the predicted wins for each party, in order of predicted majority. For instance on the Labour sheet (page 4), we can look for Bedfordshire Mid as a "Lab-14" seat and find it in the second column:

Maj	Name	2019	LMaj
14	Bedfordshire Mid	CON	2

This confirms to us that Bedfordshire Mid was Conservative-held in 2019 and we know it is a predicted Labour gain because it is on the Labour sheet. It also tells us the crucial number '2', which would be the Labour parliamentary majority (LMaj) if the Labour party won Bedfordshire Mid (and all easier seats), but failed to win any closer Labour seats.

In other words, if the Labour party win Bedfordshire Mid their majority should be at least 2, but if they lose it, their majority should be less than 2 or there will be a hung parliament. As seats are declared and marked on the party sheets, the colours will indicate how high (or low) the Labour tide is flowing. If the Labour party win most of the seats in the third column of their sheet, then they will have a majority in parliament.

Additionally if Labour are able to win all of the third column and some of the seats in the second column of their sheet, then Keir Starmer will have an outright majority.

Marginal sheet

The last sheet (page 7) shows marginal seats, which have a predicted majority of less than 8pc. The other sheets show the big picture of which

- The marginals are a key battleground. The party winning the most marginals is having the best night (relative to expectations)
- Tactical voting trends, if any, may be visible on this sheet
- High-profile seats can be followed to watch for any surprise upsets

Notes

- The predictions given as examples above are as at 09:00 4 July 2024. They may become outdated, even though the slide sheets themselves will be updated.
- For reasons of space, constituency names are sometimes truncated. But there will always be enough of the name displayed to distinguish clearly between seats.
- On the party pages, seats are sorted by predicted majority (rounded to the nearest whole percent), and then by alphabetical order within that group.
- Not all Labour and Conservative seats can be shown on the "Predicted Labour Seats" and "Predicted Conservative Seats" sheets. Only the 213 most marginal seats are displayed. The others are likely to be safe.
- Names of individuals shown on the marginal sheet are the names of those elected at 2019. They may not be candidates for the same seat or party in 2024.
